

"Rhythm worked hard every day of his life in order to keep himself safe. Without his sight, he's had to memorize his home and rely on his other senses to tell him where he is. Even then he couldn't always find his way. Along with this, he had chronic allergies and weak lungs. I consider strength a big part of who Rhythm was because not only did he work so hard daily to keep himself safe, but he had strength to help others, including me. It takes strength to be able to trust someone you can't see and I've been lucky enough to be someone trusted by Rhythm. His ability to teach is something I could never have gotten with anyone else. Rhythm has the ability to teach you how to be strong and sturdy for yourself, because you have to be strong and sturdy with him in order to keep both you and him safe. This strength has to come from an inner balance of muscles, body awareness, mental awareness, and emotional strength. When I got this, he'd shine in what he can do, and then my whole being smiled."

Isabelle Haywood, BRS Rider